

1. You see two of your friends who are in the same grade as you talking to a guy in Grade 6. As you get closer, you realize they are making fun of his clothing. He's obviously grown a lot in the last couple of months and his pants are too short for him. They're saying he's a loser and "doesn't he have enough money to go buy new pants?" What script could you use to get them to stop teasing this younger student?
2. Some of the guys in your class are leaving the bathroom. They're talking about how gross it is inside because of John, another guy in your class. John walks by all of you with a really red face. You can see that he's upset. What could you say to get the guys to stop focusing on toilet humor?
3. Your mom left the house two hours ago. You told her you were going to go play basketball outside, but you've actually been inside gaming for two hours. You're really tempted to lie and say that you did go outside. How can you make a choice to be honest and forthcoming in this situation and own up to what choice you actually made? What would you say?
4. Your best friend got a vape from his older brother. He really wants to try it with you during lunch hour. You know that vaping is bad for your health, and if you get caught with it on the school property you'll get detention. What script could you use to avoid the pressure to vape with friends?
